Recovering Women: Feminisms And The Representation Of Addiction (Polemics Series) Melissa Friedling

Recovering Women: Feminism and the Representation of Addiction seeks to clarify the status of feminisms in contemporary culture and specify the problematics of feminist recovery rhetorics that respond to the representations of women in cultural practices. The female "addict"—in film, literature, art and academics—emerges as the exigency to the questions of feminism and lays bare the intersecting vectors of power that structure recovery.
